FIRST DOWN

Seven, Not Three

Moving the ball between the 10-yard lines isn't a big problem for the Redskins; converting long drives into touchdowns is. Coach Joe Gibbs has proven his conservative nature over time — resorting to field goals on fourth and short — so the Redskins had better find a way to punch in the ball on third down. Stalled drives inside the 10 led directly to the last two losses, and a few more touchdowns would provide a cushion for the defense to be more aggressive.

SECOND DOWN

Thanksgiving Spread

Players have been clamoring for more chances to implement four-receiver sets, and Gibbs has gone along, grudgingly, the past few weeks. They will need more of the same today, QB Jason Campbell is at ease in the no-huddle offense, prospering with the additional responsibility of calling plays in that formation, and Dallas's secondary was scrambling last week as Campbell flung the ball around.

THIRD DOWN

Depth Perception

Safety Sean Taylor still is injured, which immediately will tempt opponents to challenge Washington deep. Young safeties LaRon Landry and Reed Doughty struggled mightily with their discipline last week. Tampa's savvy quarterback Jeff Garcia is likely to exploit them and is able to roll out and throw on the run, which makes life difficult for defensive backs.

FOURTH DOWN

Right Alignment

The right side of the offensive line continues to be hit with injuries, with RT Todd Wade trying to overcome a knee sprain. Starting RT Jon Jansen was lost for the season in Week 1, and undrafted rookie Stephon Heyer will play if Wade is forced out. According to league sources, Bucs reserve DE Greg White holds a major grudge against the Redskins and defensive line coach Greg Blache for being out here in 2004, and is highly motivated to attack this offensive line today.
